Passaic County Technical Institute: An International Role Model

Wayne, NJ – FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE – For the third year in a row, Passaic County Technical Institute (PCTI) hosted international visitors from the Netherlands. Lecturers and professors from Windesheim University as well as various institutions (including Luzac College), were guided through a tour of Passaic County’s academic, career, and technical high school. Their goal: to navigate PCTI’s trail-blazing child study team, famous for integrating classified and non-classified students, and develop a similar special education program.

In the Netherlands, educators are moving toward integration education and are modeling their curriculum and support programs after Passaic County Technical Institute, William Paterson University, and Passaic County Community College. PCTI’s method utilizes a combination of mainstreaming and in-class support to meet the educational needs of all students. This allows educators to provide individual attention to students while achieving multi-level education in a single classroom.
